The following letter is a response from a gentleman of this city to an old Philadelphia friend, who, though not a Radical, noticed in his correspondence, in rather strong terms of disapprobation, General Blair's "attempted Southern speech," at a recent meeting at Long Branch of the cofficers of the army and navy of the Gulf." The point and pungency of the sion to lay it before our readers :

You reverse the picture and paint a an officer troubled with cacathes loquendi. tands Grant, Thomas and others, as Blair commenced to laud Lee and Jackson, and also ask-"Do you not believe he would be shot down in his tracks ?"

Lanswer-"It is not in human nature for the conquered to flatter the conqueror: it is, to be just and bear honorable testimony. Ancient as well as modern historians never fail to add additional culogy to the names of great warriors who honored their brave opponents. The heroes at "Long Branch" be-littled their fame when hissing and slurring the manifestation of a generous, chivalric sentiment, pronouncing Lee and Stonewall Jackson "foemen worthy of their steel !" Your conception of a reversed picture fades in the impossibility of its occurrence.

We will test it. Soon after the war at a large dinner party in Halifax, in a few felicitous remarks, which occasion called forth, Gen. McClausland, in reverting to the last act of the great military drama closing on the stage of secession—paid a soldierly panegyric to the distinguished Generals of the federal army, and said that if the terms of peace and reunion had been left to those men who breasted the storm of battle, conciliation, unity and harmony would have been promptly restored. To radical and fanatical politicians, must, he remarked, be alone attributed the rancer and ill blood that still separate the two sections, -perplexing legislation, and annihilating law, and ignoring humanity."
